PUBLICATION STANDARDS

The Revista de Psicoanálisis de la Asociación Psicoanalítica de Madrid [Psychoanalysis Journal of the Psychoanalytical Association of Madrid] (APM) is a publication whose purpose is to be a space for expression, discovery, and respect for the plurality of psychanalytical thought, to promote scientific discussion, investigate areas of psychoanalytical practice and theory, and to make known psychoanalysis's contributions to health and culture.

It prints three monographic editions per year. Each of them intends to provide a complete and updated approach to the topic discussed based on the choice of one or two "classic" articles that show the evolution of psychanalytical thought, as well as the following sections:

- Original, contemporary articles.
- Theoretical-clinical dialogues, "Openings", which include dialogues with other disciplines and manuscripts beyond the topic of the monographic.
- Reviews of books, psychoanalysis journals, and international conferences of special interest in our field.

The printed edition is published in Spanish. An electronic version is available for those registered at http://apmadrid.org/interna.aspx?page=Revista-APM

The works accepted for publication remain the property of the Asociación Psicoanalítica de Madrid, and their total or partial reproduction must be duly authorised. The Revista de Psicoanálisis de la APM is not liable for the specific content published by the authors, the latter being responsible for ensuring that the confidentiality of cases is maintained.

Original manuscripts must be submitted to the technical secretary of the journal (apmrevista@apmadrid.org), who will make the changes necessary to anonymise them. In order to guarantee anonymity, the editorial board will submit them to three reviewers under double blinding. The evaluators will submit their assessments to the editorial board with three possible conclusions: acceptance, rejection, or request for amendments.

How to Prepare an Article

Requirements for Publication

To guarantee anonymity during the evaluation process, no information identifying the author should appear, whether in the text or the abstract.

Both the manuscripts and the bibliography are assumed to adhere to publication standards.

The maximum length of the text shall be 9000 words, not including the abstract or bibliographical citations. If clinical material is present, the author will have specified the chosen system for maintaining confidentiality (Gabbard, 2020; The International Journal of Psychanalysis).

The maximum length for comments shall be 1500 words, while, for reviews of journals or international events, the maximum shall be 1000.

Bibliographical reviews, which require neither an abstract nor keywords, must deal with publishing news from the last two or three years. The maximum length shall be 2500 words, although the editorial board shall evaluate those of greater length when concerning books that merit this. In the reviews, the bibliographical format shall be the same as for all other works.

Works shall be sent by e-mail to the address apmrevista@apmadrid.org. Final publication thereof shall be subject to the journal's publishing needs.

Articles shall be sent by e-mail, composed in Microsoft Word, Times New Roman font size 14, with 1.5 spacing between lines, 2.5 cm margins, and numbered pages, according to the following format: the first page must include the title in Spanish, English, and French; the first and last name of the authors, e-mail address, and centre where they came from. The article abstract and keywords, also in Spanish, French, and English, shall consist of 150-200 words and a maximum of 6 key words. The abstract shall clearly and simply explain the article's concept, framework of the argument, and conclusions.

It is essential for footnotes to be minimal. If additional information must be added, an appendix shall be included at the end of the text. Tables, figures, photographs, or diagrams shall be reduced to a minimum and, if they are copyrighted, shall be submitted with the corresponding authorisation. With regard to typographical details, italics shall be used when a term in another language is introduced, to highlight something, or when the title of another work is referenced. Underlining or bolding as a method of emphasis shall be avoided. Quotation marks shall only be used to cite verbatim what someone says or for the name of a chapter or journal article.

Citations and Bibliographical References

Citations from other texts shall be accurate, brief, and extract the basic content required according to the line of argument. If the original is in another language and the text reproduced is a translation by the manuscript's author, this shall be indicated in a footnote. The cited text shall be inserted in quotation marks and the parts deleted shall be replaced by ellipses. Before the citation, the last name of the author and year of publication of the work shall be specified (according to the standards set forth for bibliographical references), along with the exact page in the original work in parenthesis (before closing the parenthesis and after the year, following a comma, lowercase p, period, and page number). If the same work is cited again, in the next citation and those appearing thereafter, ibid. and the page number shall be indicated in parenthesis. For example: (Freud, 1923/1997, p. 69) and thereafter (ibid., p. 90).

If the cited article was published in a digital journal, the corresponding DOI citation shall be included.

If the electronic article does not have a DOI, its URL address will be inserted at the end of the citation.

Bibliographical references within the text:

Only those required by the line of argument shall be included. All mention in the text of a bibliographical reference shall correspond to the full entry for it at the end of the document, and vice versa.

- In references throughout the text, the author's last name and the work's year of publication shall be specified. In cases when the date of the edition and publication do not match, include the original publication date before a forward slash. For example: (Freud, 1923/1997) or Freud (1923/1997).
- When deemed relevant, the page number shall be included in the reference. The citation shall be inserted differently depending on whether it is based on the text or the author:
- "Language is an exclusively human and non-instinctive method for communicating ideas, emotions, and desires using a system of deliberately-produced symbols" (Sapir, 1966, p. 14).
- Sapir (1966) affirms that "Language is an exclusively human and non-instinctive method for communicating ideas, emotions, and desires using a system of deliberately-produced symbols" (p.14).
- If there are two authors, the first surname of both shall be included, separated by the conjunction "and". For example: (Donnet and Green, 1973). If there are more than two authors, the surname of the first shall be followed by the expression et al. For example: (Tuckett et al., 2008).
- Avoid citing the full name of publications in the text which already appear in their entirety in the references at the end.

Citations and references at the end of the document:

- In the case of a single author, his or her first surname shall appear (with only the first letter capitalised), followed by a comma, and the capitalised first letter of the given name only, followed by a period (or first letters of two or more given names in compound names).
- In the case of two or more authors, the citations of a sole author shall precede those with co-authors. If there are more than two authors, the surname and first letter of the given name of up to the first six authors shall be included, adding et al. after the author or authors. There shall be a space and the year of publication shall appear in parentheses.

- For chronological ordering, the text's edition date shall be used, which will also be what appears in the reference to the citation within the text, preceded by the original year of publication in such case. If two or more publications by one author from the same year are cited, the year will be entered successively with lowercase letters in alphabetical order; these letters must also appear alongside the year in the reference to the citation within the text.
- In the full citation, the original composition and publication years shall be specified at the end and in parentheses.
- In the case of books or articles translated into Spanish from an original version in another language, the full citation of the original shall be included first, followed by the translated version, including the name of the translator.
